Dear Andy:

I want to thank you for your letter of September first, in which you call to my attention the article in Popular Science magazine.

The system that was discussed in this article has been in existence for a long time in one form or another, and I believe was originally conceived by a gentleman in Texas a number of years ago. These charts were offered for sale to bank tellers, market cashiers, etc. The system has not proved particularly successful; however, I suspect it was far better than nothing, which was what was available at that time.

I enjoyed your visit to the West Coast, and do hope to see you again before too long.

Thanks once again for calling this matter to my attention.

Sincerely,

Mac
